CAPT. C. A. BOUTELLE THE WORLD OF SOCIETY

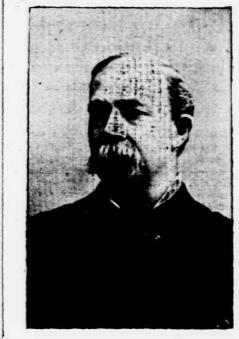

His Long Service in the House of Representatives.

A READY AND FORCIBLE DEBATER

Cordial Personal Relations With Opponents.

CAREER IN THE NAVY

Capt. Chas. A. Boutelle, whose death was announced in The Star yesterday, was one of the most conspicuous figures in Congress during his long term as a member of the House from Maine. He had a nervous, impulsive nature, being plain and outspoken as to his opinions and sentiments, yet, even when his plain talk amounted to prusqueness it did not give offense, his greatness of heart and frank generosity He was an earnest partisan and combatdebate. Being a man of magnificent physithe floor of the House immediately commanded attention, while the fire and forcefulness of his speech rendered him a powerful advocate or opponent. As has been characteristic of the Maine men in Conpublic questions and capable of discussing intelligently anything brought into debate. Personal Relations Cordial.

Though as a partisan in the House Captain Boutelle had many bitter encounters with men of the other party, and though he not infrequently contended sharply with members of his own side of the House on questions not of party significance, his personal relations were almost universally cordial through a long term of service. He was fearless and generous and a good friend. This assured him the respect and, generally, the affection of his associates in either party. The esteem in which he was held was testified to by the promptness with which Congress adopted the sugges-tion to provide for his restoration to the held was testified to by the promptness with which Congress adopted the suggestion to provide for his restoration to the navy as a captain on the retired list, when he resigned from Congress on account of ill health, early last winter.

Functional from his brother's residence, 477 Washington street northwest, Thursday, May 23, at 2 o'clock p.m.

Capt. Boutelle had a brilliant career in the navy during the war, having entered the volunteer service. He was also successful as a newspaper man, and was an To him, as chairman of the House naval committee, belongs much of the credit for the upbuilding of the navy to its present rank among the navies of the world. He first entered the House of Representatives from Maine at the opening of the Forty-eighth and was in continuous service until the beginning of the Fifty-sixth Congress. Though elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress, a sudden attack of illness pre-vented his serving in that Congress. December 21, 1899, he was selzed with un-consciousness while in Boston, and never recovered his health sufficiently to attend to his congressional duties. Finally, at the beginning of the closing session, he re-signed, and in compliance with a special act of Congress, he was appointed captain in the navy and placed on the retired list.

His History.

Capt. Boutelle was born in Lincoln county, Maine, in 1839. His father was a shipmaster, which profession he in turn adopted. At the outbreak of the war he volunteered to the naval service and was appointed an acting master and served in the blockading squadron off Charleston. Later he commanded the Nyanza at the capture of Mobile, and subsequently commanded the naval forces in Mississippi sound. In 1870, however, Capt. Boutelle determined to leave the sea, and soon afterward he became editor of the Dally Bengor Whig, and in 1874 its controlling owner. Two years later he was chosen a delegate of the republican national convention at Cincinnati. Unanimous nomination for Congress in 1890 was the prompt recognition of his services. At the republican convention in Chicago he represented Maine on the na-

Farewell, dear mother, but not forever;
There will be a glorious dawn.
We shall meet to part, no, never,
On the resurrection morn.
Though your darling form lies sleeping
In the cold and silent tomb,
You will have a glorious wakening
When our divine Lord says come.
We weep, though your toils are over,
But rejoice in sweet
Assurance He giveth His
